Early dawn saw some of the hackmen endeavoring to secure good positions for their teams at the Reading station. The line of carriages extended from the Eagle Hotel on Washington street to the Tiber, while another string occupied positions along the road leading to the freight station. This line was interspersed with the customary eating stands, constructed for the occasion along the curb. The two foot curb ordinance suffered, but what wouldn't on a morning of this sort?

A brand new feature for Topton or any other day was the agreement of the souvenir dealers to give 10 per cent. of their proceeds to the Orphan's Home. The Cyclorama even went so far as to give 20 per cent. An effort was made to have all the vendors of small articles enter into this project but only a few of the more staple ones agreed to it. The action is worthy of commendation and doubtless shows the management of the Home that some of the Gettysburg people appreciate the visitors.

The principal points from which the excursionists came are: Reading, Lebanon, Allentown, Pottstown, Pottsville and Phoenixville, although the majority of them was collected from the smaller stations between these points. Only nine sections had been announced but the railroad people found it necessary to run a tenth one. The atmosphere did not dampen the spirits of the crowd and they proceeded to make the town their own for the day. The Topton people are not as lucrative a crowd as some that come to Gettysburg but there are so many of them that the small expenditures of each goes to make up a large total.

The first section was scheduled to leave at 5 p. m. and the other ones to follow at intervals of 10 minutes; the last one being supposed to get away from town before 7:00.

Other Visitors

The members of the Hamden Fire company of Reading accompanied by the Philharmonic Band of that city, who were attending the Firemen's Convention at Harrisburg, came to visit the battlefield this morning. They were met at the station by a committee from the Gettysburg company and escorted to the Hotel Gettysburg. After leaving their instruments there, they were taken over the field.

After dinner at the Hotel, they paid a pretty tribute to their former fellow-townsmen, Dr. T. C. Billheimer, by calling at his residence in a body. Most of the members of the company and the band were friends of long standing to Dr. Billheimer, who for many years supplied one of the Lutheran pulpits in Reading.

More Expected

Three cars to be attached to the 9:15 train this evening will bring three separate tourist parties who expect to spend Sunday going over the battlefield. They are made up by the Marster's Tourist Agency, the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad and the Lehigh Valley Road. Part of them will stay at the Eagle Hotel and the balance at the Hotel Gettysburg. Holzworth Brothers will take them over the field. They will leave over the Western Maryland on Monday morning.

BIGGEST CROWD OF TOPTONITES

Railway People Say This Was the Largest Crowd They Have Brought. Other Visitors Pay Tribute to Dr. Billheimer.

Threatening skies and the inevitable fakers, flanked by the hackmen greeted the happy throng of Topton excursionists who began to arrive shortly after 10 o'clock and kept on coming until after 1:00. Twelve sections, containing 120 cars brought 4627 of them; 500 more than the number that visited the town last year.

Early dawn saw some of the hackmen endeavoring to secure good positions for their teams at the Reading station. ## LINE OF PARADE IS ANNOUNCED

Committee on Arrangements for Farmers' Day Has Decided upon Formation and Route of Parade. Indications Point to Success.

According to all present indications one week from to-day will see the biggest and best Farmers' Day for Gettysburg. Considerably larger and more prizes are offered than in former years. This will naturally draw forth more exhibits but the fact that really indicates the success of the day is the spirit of co-operation expressed by the county people. Farmers coming into town during the past week, when addressed concerning Farmers' Day, spoke of being anxious to view the products that will be shown, and most of them have already made arrangements for their own entries.

The past season has produced bountiful crops of most everything grown in this section. Some fine specimens of the various fruits and grains may be looked for. It is expected that the cash prize of $7.50 offered by The Times for the best wheat will bring forth a larger number of exhibits than in other years, and quite a number of people have mentioned that they will compete for the year's subscription to be awarded for the best oats.

The committee on arrangements has been busy looking after the details of the event. They have decided upon the route of the parade as follows: After the marshalls and aides have reported to William McG. Tawney on Center Square at 12:30 the line will form on Springs avenue with its right resting on West street and be ready to move promptly at 12:50. The nine sections will then proceed in the order mentioned: 1st section, composed of single driving horses; 2nd, spans of driving horses; 3d, four horse teams of draught horses; 4th, pairs of draught horses; 5th, four mule teams; 6th, pairs of mules; 7th, pony teams; 8th, floats from the county that will compete for prizes; 9th, advertising floats and automobiles. This last section is not eligible for prizes. They will go East on Chambersburg street to Center Square and continue down York street to Stratton, South on Stratton street to High from there North on Baltimore and on Carlisle to Water street where they will disperse. By covering this route the parade will go past all those business places that have contributed prizes.

Among the firms that have already decided to enter floats in the advertising division are: the Gettysburg Ice and Storage Company, the Atlantic Refining Company and the Biglerville Poultry Show. It is not necessary to report entries of this nature to the committee in charge and it is thought that there will be quite a few others who have not been heard from.

DID GETTYSBURG DO ALL THIS?

Colored Visitor from the Battlefield Shows Some Class at Frederick. She Might Make a Valuable Asset if Properly Directed.

What a raffle was put in the colored population of our neighboring town across the Maryland border by the "Girl from Gettysburg", as she is termed in the Frederick paper's account of the affair, is shown below.

"The Circuit Court of Frederick County adjourned last evening with the case of assault with intent to murder against Richard Potts, colored, still pending. Potts was accused of a murderous assault upon another negro named Mason, the whole fracas growing out of too much enthusiasm about a "girl from Gettysburg," who figured prominently in the testimony. Mason, it appeared from the testimony of "Skinny" Johnson and others, saw "the girl from Gettysburg" walking along the street, and immediately recognized her as a friend of the past. Simultaneously Potts awoke to the fact that he too knew "the girl from Gettysburg," and as the habit seemed to grow, "Skinny," too, crossed the street to shake her hand. This, according to the evidence, was too much for Mason, and he proceeded to draw upon his store of invective, intimating that the morals of Potts and his family were not particularly creditable. Potts, in return, shoved a pistol toward the anatomy of Mason, clicking that instrument twice, without effect. Potts' arrest followed.

Who this "queen of disturbance" was was not divulged. But if she did as well as the description states, practically without preparation, there is no way of telling what she might do by a proper direction of her talent during one of the excursions from Baltimore.

SEASON'S FIRST FALL

From a Chestnut Tree Breaks Boy's Nose.

Lehman, the 17 year old son, of Mr. and Mrs. Nathan Strausbaugh, who reside near Abbottstown, while shaking chestnuts, fell a distance of 20 feet to the ground and sustained a broken nose and other minor injuries about the head and face. The limb on which young Strausbaugh was standing suddenly broke precipitating him to the ground and in his fall his face struck on the knot of a tree, fracturing his nose, injuring his upper lip and jaw and the roof of his mouth.

The young man alighted on his feet and walked a considerable distance to a spring where he was found unconscious by Mrs. Daniel Switzer, a neighbor, who at once summoned his parents. Dr. H. D. Miller, of Abbottstown, was called and gave the young man the required medical and surgical attention.

DESERTER STILL MISSING

Trooper, who Deserted on Way to Gettysburg, not Heard of.

The cavalryman who successfully fled from the troops that were here for the dedication of the Wadsworth monument, as they were leaving Frederick for Thurmont several days ago, is still at large and so far as can be learned his whereabouts are unknown at the present. Captain Forsythe, commander of the troops said that it is thought the missing man was in Pennsylvania, but he expected to see his return any day. "This is the man's second offense," said the captain. "The other time he left, he returned to camp within five days."

After the man is missing for ten days he is branded as a deserter, and if, when seen after this time, he refuses to halt upon first notice, the soldiers are at liberty to fire upon him. Captain Forsythe stated that when a man of this character returns to camp, he is usually fined to the extent of a month's pay.

MEETING OF THE PARENT TEACHERS

New Members Acquired. Committees Appointed. Rev. Oyler Addressed Association. Unwashed Come in for Discussion.

About 200 members attended the meeting of the Parent Teachers' Association Friday evening. The principal feature of the program was Dr. R. S. Oyler's talk on "Some By-Products" during which he advocated a study of Agriculture. Mrs. J. B. Baker delightfully entertained the audience by a piano solo and Miss Maud Miller gave a reading of "Katrina's Visit to New York."

One of the conditions discussed was the unwashed appearance of the younger pupils hands and faces. The arrangement of desks in Miss Annie Majors' room was reported to be improper for obtaining best results and it was suggested that by dividing Miss Bausch's sewing classes into smaller sections more attention could be given to the individual work of the pupil.

The president appointed on the visiting committee: Mrs. W. F. Gilliland, Mrs. Sarah McCullough, Mrs. Samuel Weiser, Mrs. Crow and Miss Ella Gilliland; on the program committee: Mrs. F. Mark Bream, William Sharretts, and Miss Nellie Blocher; the committee to have charge of Tag Day, October 17; C. B. Dougherty, Eugene Phillips, Wilson Bream, William Gilbert and Mr. Foth. Attention was directed to the election of officers to be held at the next meeting for the ensuing year.

Annual class dues were declared due and payable on the regular meeting night in November. With eighteen parents in attendance, the eighth grade taught by Miss Elizabeth Rummel was awarded the Home and School Banner. Mr. and Mrs. A. M. Hollinger, Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Heighes, Mrs. Wayne Keet, Mrs. J. B. Morris and Irvin Neusch were reported as new members since last meeting.

VISITORS STILL THERE

Prominent People Remain at Mountain Resorts.

Notwithstanding the coming of the colder weather, there are still some people on the mountain who are averse to taking their departure. Dr. Carlos Maria de Pena, minister from Uruguay, who has occupied a cottage at Blue Ridge Summit, all summer, with his wife and three daughters, is finding the mountain in this fall season so pleasant and drives through the forests so delightful that he says he doesn't know when he will go back to Washington.

Romulo S. Naon, minister from Chile, and family are still at Buena Vista and are enjoying October very much in that place. Monterey inn closed this week. The Monterey club will remain open for a few days longer.

FISH FOR EVERYBODY

State Department is Sending out "Small Fry" and Frogs.

Probably a million and a half trout will be distributed from the hatcheries of the State Department of Fisheries this Fall and the coming Winter and Spring. These trout, according to State Commissioner of Fisheries N. R. Buller, are all a year old and capable of taking care of themselves and the distribution will be on the most extensive scale ever known in the State. Incidentally, the trout have all been distributed to people who have given assurances that they will look after them and make reports. Many of the individuals and clubs receiving trout for "planting" had charge of similar work a year ago and made reports. The trout are being shipped mostly from Bellefonte and the Erie county hatcheries.

Large quantities of young catfish, black bass, sunfish, perch and bluegills are also being sent out and while the low water has interfered to a certain extent with the "planting" good results have been obtained and more will be sent out later.

Many thousands of young frogs are being sent out, quite a few consignments going to farmers who took advantage of Commissioner Buller's offer to send them "bullies" for their ponds and streams.

WANT APPLICATIONS

State Department wants Automobileists to Apply for Licenses.

Automobile owners and drivers and motorcycleists are urged to send in their applications for licenses for 1915 at an early date, according to a statement issued by the State Highway Department yesterday.

Applications will be received by the automobile division from this time forward and beginning December 1, license plates for 1915 will be shipped out to applicants. These licenses will not be valid until January 1, 1915. It is hoped that by urging applicants to send in their requests early the congestion which has occurred in previous years will be avoided. Since there can be no possible excuse for failure to apply for new license plates it is expected, in view of this notice, that the leniency shown last year to those who were tardy in applying for licenses will be withheld next year.

THE ALLIES PRESS NORTH

Great Clash of Cavalry Near Belgium Border.

AN INFERNO ABOUT ARRAS

Unceasing Hail of Shells and Shrapnel Brought Destruction and Death in Stubborn Fighting.

London, Oct. 10.—That the allies are meeting with continued success in their flanking movement near the Franco-Belgian border is indicated by the official statement, although it states that the general situation has undergone no change.

It states that the cavalry forces of the two armies are now operating to the north of Lille. This shows that the allies' cavalry is pressing forward against that of the Germans and that the allies' offensive has not been checked.

An artillery contest is in progress along the entire front in the Woëvre district.

The official bulletins on the situation follow:

PARIS.

"The general situation has undergone no change.

"On our left wing the two opposing bodies of cavalry are still operating to the north of Lille and La Bassée, and the battle continues along the line marked by the regions of Lens, Arras, Bray-Sur-Somme, Chaulnes, Roye and Lassigny.

"On the center of the Oise and on the Meuse only actions of minor importance have been reported.

"On our right, in the Woëvre district, there has been an artillery contest along the entire front.

"In Lorraine, in the Vosges and in Alsace there has been no change."

The last bulletin issued in Paris says:

"There is nothing new to report excepting in the region of Roye, where in the last two days we have captured 1600 prisoners."

BERLIN.

Statement issued Thursday night and sent via London: "The situation in the western sector of the war has not changed in any essential way."

"From the western sector of the war no facts of decisive importance can be mentioned. Small progress has been made near St. Mihiel and in the Argonne."

"Before Antwerp Fort Breendonk (to the south of Antwerp) has been taken, and the attack on the inner fort line has begun therewith. The bombardment of the quarter of the town lying behind was begun after the declaration of the commander of the stronghold that he took the responsibility."

The London Times Boulogne correspondent, who has been on the scene, relates some phases of the fighting on the French left wing. The correspondent says he went to Arras on Sept. 13. The battle of Arras began on Oct. 1, and the whole region became a veritable inferno. All around was an unceasing hail of shells and shrapnel, violence, destruction and death.

"On the previous Thursday," the correspondent continued, "the allies were battering at the gates of Cambrai. On Friday the Germans developed a vigorous counter attack from Valenciennes."

"On Saturday the Germans, greatly reinforced, attacked with great violence all along the line. The allies were compelled to fall back from Lens and Douai, fighting stubbornly the while."

"When I left Arras the Germans' shells were bursting within three kilometers of the town. The Germans did not enter Arras, but swept around it. They cut a line between Arras and Saint Pol, seeking to effect a junction with their Bethune force. They came into contact with strong French reinforcements and were driven back in the south. In the north they retired to La Bassée, with their right wing resting on Lille."

"On Oct. 1, as darkness fell, the tired, blood-stained soldiers began to stream into Arras and for hours the air resounded with the din they made. Throughout the night the boom of the guns could be heard in the distance from the east and southeast."

"In the morning the sound of firing was still heard, and apparently as the day advanced the sound was coming nearer, but the citizens showed a stout heart and had plenty of occupation tending the wounded, who were being brought in continuously, so that the hospitals soon were full."

"The losses on both sides, I am told, have been very heavy. In one action alone five German regiments were cut up and the horses of their convoys stampeded. They were advancing on Arras by the road along the River Scarpe, and soon they came under the devastating fire from the artillery, and the whole five regiments broke and fled."

"The day, however, was not altogether favorable for the allies, as the French line was obliged to fall back considerably."

"At night squadron after squadron of war-stained and tired dragons rode into Arras, while long lines of limbers rattled out on the Douai road, laden with shells for the morrow."

"On Oct. 3, the third day's battle raged in a triangle formed by Arras, Lens and Douai. During the day I watched a daring aeroplane fight in the air.

"I was conducted to rising ground outside the town, where a wonderful battle scene came to view. Within 500 yards of us the French batteries were in action, shelling the woods to drive out the Germans. Flashes of flame burst over the woods like lightning, dancing in the tree tops. Presently the German artillery began shelling the battery near us, and as the shrapnel fire became heavier and nearer we retired."

"On Oct. 4 the action became general in all directions. In the direction of Cambrai the shells hurtled overhead. Away to the south villages were in flames, and northward a huge cloud of black smoke hangs over Lens, where the coal mines are on fire."

"Entering Arras again, we learned that all the men between eighteen and forty-eight have been ordered to leave town. They are already streaming out on foot for St. Pol."

BIG ARMIES CLASH IN RUSSIAN POLAND

Czar Tries to Turn Flank of Austro-German Forces.

Petrograd, Oct. 10.—The great battle between the Russian and Austro-German armies is in full swing along the Vistula river north of Cracow, according to reports received from the front.

The Russian war office is maintaining an unusual silence on the operations in that region of Russian Poland, but admits that great forces are engaged in conflict.

News of a raid by ten Cossack regiments (30,000 men) south of Tarnow and southeast of Cracow indicates that the Russians are inaugurating a great flanking movement in Galicia that will force the Austro-German forces north of the Vistula to weaken the center of their line.

Also advancing a large force to a point near Thorn, the biggest fortress in East Prussia, the Russians are perfecting a wedge that is aimed to strike northwest and split the German forces in such a fashion that they will be unable to co-operate.

Przemysl Garrison May Surrender.

Rome, Oct. 10.—A dispatch received here from Russian headquarters says the intimation has been given to the Austrians holding the town of Przemyśl, Galicia, that they will be permitted to surrender with military honors, but that if they refuse to surrender the Russians will give them no quarter.

The Tribuna says it has received information that the garrison of Przemyśl has surrendered. The Russian embassy, however, denies this report.

AIR ATTACK ON COLOGNE

Zeppelin Hangars Again Injured By Aviator of Allied Forces.

London, Oct. 10.—According to a Central News dispatch from Amsterdam, another aerial raid has been made by the allies on Cologne and Düsseldorf, both important German Zeppelin airship bases. The telegram follows:

"A dispatch from Cologne states that the hostile aeroplanes threw bombs at the Zeppelin hangars at Cologne and Düsseldorf on Thursday afternoon. The former were uninjured but damage was inflicted at Düsseldorf."

The previous aerial raid upon Cologne and Düsseldorf was made by British naval aviators from Belgium on Sept. 23. The attack upon Düsseldorf was officially reported as successful. Lieutenant C. H. Collet dropped three bombs upon the Zeppelin shed, sweeping down to within 400 feet of his target. The attack on Cologne at that time, like that reported in the above dispatch, apparently failed, so far as inflicting any damage is concerned.

JAPS TO SHELL TSING-TAO

Guns Cover Forts and Attack May Begin Any Day.

Peking, Oct. 10.—The Japanese have mounted siege guns on Prince Henry mountain, which entirely dominates all three of the Tsing-Tao forts, according to advices reaching Peking from Kiaochow.

These forts are named Bismarck, Moltke and Ilis, and are between three and four miles from the mountain.

The attack on Tsing-Tao may begin any day. Prior to it a demand for the surrender of the place will be made.

German Mine Kills German.

Copenhagen, Oct. 10.—A German fishing vessel has been blown up by a German mine in the Langeland belt, north of the coast of Denmark. The captain was killed, but the rest of the crew was saved.

10,000 Germans Taken.

Paris, Oct. 10.—In the recent battles along the East Prussian frontier the Russians took 10,000 prisoners and forty cannon, according to a dispatch from Petrograd to the Havas News agency.

ALLIES ARE PUSHING TURKEY INTO WAR

Dardanelles Issue Likely to Force Sultan's Hand.

London, Oct. 10.—A dispatch to the Reuter Telegram company from Athens says it is asserted there that German officers have placed some 42-centimeter guns in the forts in the Dardanelles and the Bosphorus.

Washington, Oct. 10.—The alternative which the Ottoman empire is facing as to whether the Dardanelles are to be swung open in answer to the demand of the Triple Entente or whether the key to the Black sea is to remain in Turkish possession, promises to force the Porte to take sides and join the European struggle, according to opinions expressed in diplomatic circles here.

Efforts to open the Dardanelles were said at the Russian embassy to have been only a commercial and not a warlike purpose. Russia, it was explained, was not able to ship its wheat to England and other markets where it would be going normally, while the United States, now unable to use any of the Baltic sea ports into Russia, if the Dardanelles were open, might find entrance for its cotton goods and other products to Russia through the Black sea ports. Russia, the officials insisted, had no desire to get her fleet into the Mediterranean, as it was not needed there.

OFF TRAIN-TOP TO DEATH

Overhead Bridges Sweep Away Two In Fight Between Hooches and Police.

Paterson, N. J., Oct. 10.—In a fight between railroad detectives and a party of five unidentified men atop a fast freight train traveling forty miles an hour, two of the latter were swept to death against overhead bridges near here. The others escaped.

The Delaware, Lackawanna & Western fast freight from Hoboken to Pennsylvania cities, carrying a rich collection of valuable silks, has been robbed repeatedly of late, and detectives were recently placed aboard it each night. While searching the train the detectives found five men hidden in cars. The fight ensued.

ANTWERP BURNS; FOE CLOSES IN

Shells and Bombs Set Beleaguered City Ablaze.

KING ALBERT FLEES TO OSTEND

The Germans Are Hurling Shells at the Rate of Twenty a Minute into the City.

London, Oct. 10.—Shells were falling upon stricken Antwerp at the rate of twenty a minute, according to the latest advices received here by the news agencies, and the Germans had completely occupied the southeastern section of Antwerp's third fortified line.

From Rosendael, a score of miles directly north of Antwerp, word was received that all night long and continuing steadily throughout Friday morning the roar of war guns, the noise softened by distance, could be heard at Rosendael without interruption or any let-up, except for a slight lessening during a brief period of the very early dawn.

"The sky last night (Thursday) to the south was red from the burning city of Antwerp," one Rosendael dispatch concluded.

Whereas the first fire of the main attack of the Germans on Antwerp went wide in a way that caused derisive yells from the defenders, with the entrance of Taube aeroplanes and the Zeppelins into the engagement the location of the Belgian batteries was accurately located and the Germans then got the range with deadly precision.

From witnesses who watched the Zeppelins fly across the city word was received that they saw one of the kaiser's airships hit by a shell fired from an inner fort and crash to the earth just outside the city.

Among the buildings that are known to be enveloped in flames are the famous museum and law courts. Nothing can be said definitely as to the extent of the damage suffered by the cathedral, the massive tower of which offers a tempting mark to gunners bent upon destroying one of Europe's most beautiful cities.

The only word of encouragement that comes from the surrounding country as to conditions in the city is that "Antwerp is still holding out." And there is a prayer being offered in many an English home that Antwerp will be able to hold out until help from the allies can be poured in from the north and northwest.

"An officer whom I met," says a dispatch from Ghent, "states that the bombardment of the Antwerp cathedral had begun at the hour he left that city, which was 10 o'clock on Thursday morning. Fire had broken out in many places. The Germans were using their 16-inch howitzers with terrific effect on the inner ring of forts, but guns of smaller caliber were being used for the destruction of the city itself."

"The airship which dropped a bomb on the law courts was subjected to a terrific fire and must certainly have been hit. The burgomaster of Antwerp has declared his intention of supporting the military in resisting to the last."

Although last reports of the exact whereabouts of King Albert, according to an Amsterdam dispatch, quote the Nieuws Van der Dag of Ghent as stating that the king had just arrived at Zelzate, on the Dutch frontier, but that almost the whole of the Belgian field army is being kept in Antwerp to try to hold the city.

A wireless press telegram from Berlin states that King Albert has been badly wounded while leading the Belgian army.

PENROSE PROBE DELAYED

Senators Too Busy to Take Up Campaign Inquiry.

Washington, Oct. 10.—Postponement until after the November elections of action on the Norris resolution to direct an investigation into the financing of the senatorial primaries in Illinois and Pennsylvania was decided upon by the senate elections committee.

The committee had agreed at its last meeting to vote on the resolution Friday, after weeks of preliminary inquiry. That the committee was prepared to vote in favor of the resolution was indicated by the fact that an effort was made to find members who might serve on the committee of inquiry at this time. So many of them, however, were planning for work in connection with the approaching campaign that it was decided to defer action at this time.

Senator Kern, the chairman of the committee, said the committee would meet again as soon as possible after the election.

TELLS OF FLIGHT IN HAIL OF SHOT

Passenger's Story of Thrilling Adventure In the Air.

PERILS OF FORCED LANDING

Almost Miraculous Escape of Air Man After Bullets Disabled His Machine. His Companion, Describing Awful Experience, Says, "I Waited What Seemed My Inevitable End."

The exciting experiences of a passenger aboard a French war aeroplane are described in the Paris Petit Journal. Shots from German sky guns disabled the craft, but it came to earth in a secluded spot. While the passenger kept guard with a carbine the aviator repaired the machine. Then an ascent was made, and the machine at length landed within the French lines.

The passenger's story follows: "We started directly north, tossed a little by an east wind. Suddenly the pilot cut off the motor, and nothing was audible except the whistling of the wind through the rigging of the aeroplane. The pilot pointed out some little black smoke puffs far below us and told me to listen. I could hear nothing except the wind. Then the motor was started again, and its steady hum covered everything. The smoke puffs grew nearer and more numerous. We tried to rise still higher when a great wind came and threw us one side. The ever ready pilot righted us, but another and more terrible shock hurled us vertically upward.

"We Then Began to Fall."

"We then began to fall. The smoke and flashes now were quite near us, and we were thrown this way and that by great blasts of air. We still forged ahead at full speed. Clinging to the framework, I awaited what seemed my inevitable end.

"Suddenly calm was restored. We had passed the danger zone. Beneath us stretched a great forest, cut here and there with ravines. As we left the zone of danger our aeroplane began to list. The pilot having done his utmost to right us, cut off the motor and, half turning his head, gazed toward our left wing, where a strip of torn canvas was streaming in the wind. "We began a headlong descent, ending with an abrupt landing in a narrow glade. No one but that pilot could have attempted so desperate a maneuver with success. He jumped to earth, shouting 'Take your carbine while I repair the damage!' He set to work to fasten a patch over the torn wing. 'Quick!' he added. 'Quick! If the Germans come, fire at me! Then I will set the machine on fire.'

"Rises Over Sea of Troops."

"When the damaged wing had been repaired we tried to drag the aeroplane to the other end of the glade. But roots and stones impeded it. We were on the point of abandoning our task when suddenly the pilot sprang forward and thrust his revolver into the face of a dirt stained man who had approached without our hearing or seeing him. I seized my carbine, while the man stood easily with his hands in his pockets and said: 'We belong to you. We are ready to guide our men through the forest. We will give you a hand.'

"Upon a signal from this mysterious stranger a number of peasants took their places around our aeroplane. In an instant we were in our places ready to go. The propeller was started, and we arose. With a bound that carried us up almost vertically we passed above a sea of troops at the edge of the forest. Smoke and gun flashes re-appeared, but a sudden swerve enabled us to regain under cover of the forest a sufficient altitude. When we came out again the sky guns had ceased their fire, and later, descending slowly, we landed in the French lines."

Mrs. Shaw is a woman of the old school and averse to present day fashions. Wealthy and able to indulge in any luxury she desires, a devotee of the automobile and the theater, a lover of all out of door sports and a leader in many social activities, she still retains her preference for the styles of her girlhood. She obtained appointment as delegate to the church convention solely for the purpose of appearing before the body in her bonnet, black silk dress and hoopskirt of over fifty years ago and which she still affects on all occasions and to urge the condemnation of the slit skirt, hobble and X ray and other present day styles.

MONTICELLO MAY BE A HOME FOR PRESIDENTS.

Story of Historic Estate Offered to the Government For $500,000.

Announcement by Representative Jefferson M. Levy of New York of his willingness to sell to the government as a national shrine Monticello, home of Thomas Jefferson, renews interest in the historic property near Charlottesville, Albemarle county, Va. Mr. Levy's price is $500,000.

Mrs. Martin W. Littleton of New York began her celebrated campaign to have the government take over the estate about three years ago. Mr. Levy had objected to selling the place. Now that he has consented to giving it up he does so with the express stipulation that the property when acquired by the federal government be made the Virginia home of the presidents of the United States and maintained for their occasional occupancy.

Admiral Uriah P. Levy, U. S. N., willed Monticello to the people of the United States, but his will was contested by heirs, and the courts upheld them. Jefferson M. Levy, his nephew, soon afterward purchased the shares of the other heirs and became sole owner.

The estate includes 215 acres of land assessed at a little more than $9,000. The buildings were assessed at $120,000. Representative Levy is said to have spent $1,000,000 on the property. The house is but a single story structure, with a white dome above it, built upon an attic octagon. Two spacious porticos with white Doric columns face east and west and mark the main entrances. The house contains much of the original furniture, and most of that which could not be recovered has been reproduced.

The University of Virginia is intimately linked in association with Monticello. It was from the porch and windows of this mansion that Jefferson in his old age, with the aid of a telescope, watched the erection of the university buildings.

Four short miles from the spot where he afterward founded the university, Jefferson commenced the building of his home in 1764 and called the place Monticello. Heavily in debt on leaving the presidency, he sold off portions of the estate and finally gave up his library. Two weeks after his death his daughter, Mrs. Randolph, was forced to sell it. It was finally disposed of to James M. Barclay, the heirs of the estate obtaining only $7,000. Ten years later Uriah Levy bought it from Barclay for $2,700.

ELECTRIC OVEN STOPS POISON

Breaker Who Drank Bichloride of Mercury Is Saved by New Method.

A new method for the treatment of bichloride of mercury poisoning has come to light in the recovery of David R. Beach, a New York broker. The latest method consists in causing a perspiration by applying to the body the heat of an electric oven at a temperature of about 200 degrees.

Mr. Beach drank a glass of water in which, unknown to him, there had been dissolved twenty-two grains of bichloride of mercury. As he was drinking the last of the water he noticed the metallic taste and immediately made inquiry. Dr. Paul Fletcher of Brooklyn applied a stomach pump. This, however, was ineffective, as were repeated doses of milk and the whites of eggs. Then the electric furnace was tried. After three weeks' treatment Mr. Beach is attending to business as usual, the only change being that he is still restricted in diet.

Annual Catch of Lobsters.

It is estimated that the annual catch of lobsters in the world is 125,000,000.

CURIOUS FIGURING.

It's a Way the Russian Peasant Has, and It's an Enigma.

A UNIQUE WAY TO MULTIPLY.

It is Simplicity Itself and Absolutely Accurate, but the Why and Wherefore of the Method and Its Results Are a Puzzle to Mathematicians.

This is not a meaningless, freaky twister of a puzzle. But it is a puzzle. It is the method by which Russian peasants multiply, and as yet the boasted mental superiority of America cannot solve the simple riddle of the Slav.

Suppose you want to multiply two numbers together. Divide one of the numbers by 2, ignoring the fractions. Continue the process until the divided column reaches one. Then double the other number and continue the process until it equals in lines the first column. Then whenever a number is even in the first column strike it out, together with its corresponding number in the second column. Add the second column, and, lo, the answer! Now, why does it do it? There seems to be no reason for it, but what is it? Can you work it out?

It is infallible. It has never been known to fail. But what principle of mathematics is behind it all? Perhaps it is some queer freak of numbers, some one says, but such things are not to be turned aside with such generalities. Mathematics is not built upon so lax a system. There is some rule to bind it all.

Take the simple multiple 12 by 10. Obviously the answer is 120. Try it the Russian way. Place 12 in the first column and 10 in the second. Divide 12 by 2 and multiply 10 by 2 and place the respective answers beneath the sums from which they were derived. It will stand 6 and 20. Dividing 6 by 2 equals 3, and multiplying 20 by 2 equals 40. Continuing, 3 divided by 2 will be 1, while 40 multiplied by 2 will be 80. Now strike out all the numbers in the first column which are even and with it their parallels in the second column—12 and 6 will go out, leaving the last two parallel results. Ignoring the first column and adding the numbers in the second, the answer will be the result of 40 and 80, or 120.

The questions are: Who ever worked it out? How did he start?

Now try working the problem by putting 10 in the first column and subjecting it to the dividing and 12 to the multiplying. It will result like this: Ten and 12 will become 5 and 24, which will in turn be changed to 2 and 48 and finally into 1 and 96. Then, striking out the numbers 10 and 2 and their corresponding numbers 12 and 48, leaving the second column figures 24 and 96 to be added—this becomes 120.

There is no escaping it. No matter how large the score, it comes out right with distressing surety. Take the odd numbers. Perhaps there is some twist in the scheme that applies to even numbers. Take 25 and 15. Going right down the column they become 12 and 30; then 6 and 60; then 3 and 120; then 1 and 240; 12 and 6 go out, taking with them 30 and 60. Add 15, 120 and 240. Answer, 375. Multiply 25 by 15 according to our methods. Correct—375.

Now, why is it that the even numbers must be eliminated on the right side when they do not count at all in the addition?

It is plain to be seen that all the numbers in the second column will be even, but by what freak of calculation are those corresponding to the even numbers in the first column of no consequence when the correct sum is to be obtained?

Where no even number results in the first column, as in 15 x 13, there is no complication; 15 and 13 in the process become 7 and 26, then 3 and 52 and finally 1 and 104. Adding 13, 26, 52 and 104 equals 195, the correct sum. There can be no multiplication in figures which will divide down to a place where there are no odd numbers, for the final number must always of necessity be 1. In the sum 16 x 4, 16 divides itself into 8, 4, 2 and 1 successively, while 4 becomes 8, 16, 32 and 64. All of the pairs are crossed out, with the exception of 1 and 64. In that case the addition of the second column will be 64.

Despite the puzzling nature of this formula, there is some mathematical principle by which it can be explained. There is some rule awaiting the fertile minds of the workers by which this "stumper" can be demonstrated to be simplicity itself.

Another quizzier: Why must fractions be discarded? How is it that the result will be true when several units are cast aside? For example, consider the number 47. Dividing by 2 the result will be 23. One whole unit is thrown away. Twenty-three becomes by the same process 11, another unit discarded. Eleven resolves itself into 5, making the third unit passed by. The next step results in 2 and then 1, but why is it that these three units count for nothing?

The mere fact that the explanation is near, that the whole thing is simple if the key can be found, is one that cannot help but draw attention to this novel means of adding.—Philadelphia North American.

The more I study the world the more I am convinced of the inability of force to create anything durable.—Napoleon Bonaparte

VOTES WASTED BY THOUSANDS

Contestants Who are not Working are Receiving Help from Friends Who are Anxious to See Them Win.

Is your name in the list of contestants printed just below? If it is what are you going to do about it? Do not wait longer to decide, for you are not only hurting your own chances of winning, but you are taking votes from the other contestants who are working.

If you have made up your mind not to enter, let us know at once so that we can take your name from the list. If you have not yet decided what to do, call at the office and talk with the campaign manager and he will go over the plan with you and help you decide.

Every day hundreds of the vote coupons are received at the office for different contestants. Some are for contestants who are already actively interested in the campaign. Others are for contestants who have not been heard from and who are doing nothing for themselves. This help being given by their friends will all be wasted unless the parties who are receiving the help become active in their own behalf. If they are not going to do that we will be glad to take their name from the list so that the coupons will go to some other contestant who is working and who is deserving of help.

And help is not only coming in the way of coupons, but already subscriptions are being sent in and some for contestants who are not trying to help themselves at all.

If you are one of these contestants you will know it by a glance at the vote list which will show how many votes you have. If you find that you have been getting help unsolicited, do not delay longer. Decide one way or the other and let us know that decision so that we can either help you to get started or take your name from the list and turn any help that might come to you, to someone who is working.

- SERIOUS WASTE OF MONEY.
- Because of the improper drying of corn a vast amount of money is wasted in the payment of freight. It is estimated that 436,682 tons of water are shipped with corn every year. This would fill 14,556 freight cars of 60,000 pounds capacity, making a train more than 110 miles long.

- HER UNREASONABLENESS.
- "He disappeared one day and stayed away five years. Recently he reappeared, and his wife took him back." "Are they happy now?" "No," he says "she's unreasonable about trifles." "How so?" "She wants to know where he was during those five years."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

CHAPTER XI.

A Comedy with Music.

The Harrigans occupied the suite in the east wing of the villa. This consisted of a large drawing room and two ample bedrooms, with window balconies and a private veranda in the rear, looking off toward the green of the pines and the metal-like luster of the copper beeches.

It was raining, a fine, soft, blurring Alpine rain, and a blue-gray monotone prevailed upon the face of the waters and defied all save the keenest scrutiny to discern where the mountain tops ended and the sky began. It was a day for indoors, for dreams, good books, and good fellows.

Here they all were. Mrs. Harrigan was deep in the intricate maze of the Amelia Ars of Bologna, which, as the initiated know, is a wonderful lace. By one of the windows sat Nora, winding interminable yards of lace hemming from off the willing if aching digits of the Barone, who was speculating as to what his Neapolitan club friends would say could they see, by some trick of crystal gazing, his present occupation. Celeste was at the piano, playing (pianissimo) snatches from the operas, while Abbott looked on, his elbows propped upon his knees, his chin in his palms, and a quality of ecstatic content in his eyes.

"Play the fourth ballade," urged Abbott.

Celeste was really a great artist. As an interpreter of Chopin she had no rival among women, and only one man was her equal. She had fire, tenderness, passion, strength; she had beyond all these, soul, which is worth more in true expression than the most marvelous technique. She had chosen Chopin for his brilliance, as some will choose Turner in preference to Corot: riots of color, barbaric and tingling. She was as great a genius in her way as Nora was in hers. There was something of the elfin child in her spirit. Whenever she played to Abbott, there was a quality in the expression that awakened a wonderment in Nora's heart.

As Celeste began the andante, Nora signified to the Barone to drop his work. She let her own hands fall. Harrigan gently closed his book, for in that rough kindly soul of his lay a mighty love of music. He himself was without expression of any sort, and somehow music seemed to stir the dim and not quite understandable longing for utterance. Mrs. Harrigan alone went on with her work; she could work as long as she pleased. After the magnificent finale, nothing in the room stirred but her needle.

"Bravo!" cried the Barone, breaking the spell.

"You never played that better," declared Nora.

"That's some!" Harrigan beat his hands together thunderously. "Great stuff, eh, Barone?"

The Barone raised his hands as if to express his utter inability to describe his sensations. His elation was that ascribed to those fortunate mortals whom the gods lifted to Olympus. At his feet lay the lace hemming, hopelessly snarled.

"Father, father!" remonstrated Nora; "you will wake up all the old ladies who are having their siesta."

"Bah! I'll bet a doughnut their ears are glued to their doors. What ho! Somebody's at the portcullis. Probably the padre, come up for tea."

He was at the door instantly. He flung it open heartily. It was characteristic of the man to open everything widely, his heart, his mind, his hate of his affection.

"Come in, come in! Just in time for the matinee concert."

The padre was not alone. Courtlandt followed him in.

"We have been standing in the corridor for ten minutes," affirmed the padre, sending a winning smile around the room. "Mr. Courtlandt was for going down to the bureau and sending up our cards. But I would not hear of such formality. I am a privileged person."

"Sure yes! Molly, ring for tea, and tell 'em to make it hot. How about a little peg, as the colonel says?"

The two men declined.

How easily and nonchalantly the man stood there by the door as Harrigan took his hat! Celeste was aglow with excitement. She was thoroughly a woman; she wanted something to happen, dramatically, romantically.

But her want was a vain one. Nora hated scenes, and Courtlandt had the advantage of her in his knowledge of this. Celeste remained at the piano, but Nora turned as if to move away.

"No, don't move. That is what I came up for," insisted the padre. "If there was any malice in the churchman, it was of a negative quality. But it was in his Latin blood that drama should appeal to him strongly, and here was an unusual phase in The Great Play. He had urged Courtlandt, much against the latter's will this day, to come up with him, simply that he might set a little scene such as this promised to be and study it from the vantage of the prompter. He knew that the principal theme of all great books, of all great dramas, was antagonism, antagonism between man and woman, though by a thousand other names has it been called. He had often said, in a spirit of railleury, that this antagonism was principally due to the fact that Eve had been constructed (and very well) out of a rib from Adam. Naturally she resented this, that she had not been fashioned independently, and would hold it against man until the true secret of the parable was made clear to her.

Nora saw that opposition would be useless. After all, it would be better to sing. She would not be compelled to look at this man she so despised. At the beginning she had intended to sing badly; but as the music proceeded, she sang as she had not sung in weeks. To fill this man's soul with a hunger for the sound of her voice, to pour into his heart a fresh knowledge of what he had lost forever and forever!

Celeste turned from the keys after the final chords of "Morning Mood."

"Thank you," said Nora.

"Do not stop," begged Courtlandt.

Nora looked directly into his eyes as she replied: "One's voice can not go on forever, and mine is not at all strong."

There was a knock at the door. The managing director handed Harrigan a card.

The Padre Was Not Alone; Courtlandt Followed Him.

"Herr Rosen," he read aloud. "Send him up. Some friend of yours, Nora; Herr Rosen. I told Mr. Jill to send him up."

The padre drew his feet under his cassock, a sign of perturbation; Courtlandt continued to watch the snarl of lace dropped by the Barone; the Barone glanced fiercely at Nora, who smiled enigmatically.

Herr Rosen! There was no outward reason why the name should have set a chill on them all, turned them into expectant statues. Yet, all semblance of good fellowship was instantly gone.

Mrs. Harrigan smoothed out the wrinkles in her dress. From the others there had been little movement and no sound to speak of. Harrigan still waited by the door, seriously contemplating the bit of pasteboard in his hand.

Herr Rosen brushed past Harrigan unceremoniously, without pausing and went straight over to Nora, who was thereupon seized by an uncontrollable spirit of devilment. She hated Herr Rosen, but she was going to be as pleasant and as engaging as she knew how to be. She did not care if he misinterpreted her mood. She welcomed him with a hand. He went on to Mrs. Harrigan, who colored pleasantly. He was then introduced, and he acknowledged each introduction with a careless nod. He was there to see Nora, and he did not propose to put himself to any inconvenience on account of the others.

Herr Rosen instantly usurped the chair next to Nora, who began to pour the tea. He had come up from the village prepared for a disagreeable half hour. Instead of being greeted with icy glances from stormy eyes, he encountered such smiles as this adorable creature had never before bestowed upon him. He was in the clouds. That night at Cadenabbia had apparently knocked the bottom out of his dream. Women were riddles which only they themselves could solve for others. For this one woman he was perfectly ready to throw everything aside. A man lived but once; and he was a fool who would hold to tiars in preference to such happiness as he thought he saw opening up before him. Nora saw, but she did not care. That in order to reach another she was practicing infinite cruelty on this man (whose one fault lay in that he loved her) did not appeal to her. But her arrow flew wide of the target; at least, there appeared no result to her archery in malice. Not once had the intended victim looked over to where she sat. And yet she knew that he must be watching; he could not possibly avoid it and be human. And when he finally came forward to take his cup, she leaned toward Herr Rosen.

"You take two lumps?" she asked sweetly. It was only a chance shot, but she hit on the truth.

"One lump for mine, please," said Courtlandt, smiling.

She picked up a cube of sugar and dropped it into his cup. She had the an of one wishing it were poison. The recipient of this good will, with perfect understanding, returned to the divan, where the padre and Harrigan were gravely toasting each other with benedictine.

Nora made no mistake with either Abbott's cup or the Barone's; but the two men were filled with but one desire, to throw Herr Rosen out of the window. What had begun as a beautiful day was now becoming black and uncertain.

The Barone could control every feature save his eyes, and these openly admitted deep anger. He recollected Herr Rosen well enough. The encounter over at Cadenabbia was not the first by many. Herr Rosen's presence in this room under that name was an insult, and he intended to call the interloper to account the very first opportunity he found.

Perhaps Celeste, sitting as quiet as a mouse upon the piano stool, was the only one who saw these strange currents drifting dangerously about. That her own heart ached miserably did not prevent her from observing things with all her usual keenness. Ah, Nora, Nora, who have everything to give and yet give nothing, why do you play so heartless a game? Why hurt those who can no more help loving you than the earth can help whirling around the calm dispassionate sun? Always they turn to you, while I, who have so much to give, am given nothing! She set down her tea cup and began the aria from La Boheme.

Nora, without relaxing the false smile, suddenly found emptiness in everything.

"Sing!" said Herr Rosen.

"I am too tired. Some other time."

He did not press her. Instead, he whispered in his own tongue: "You are the most adorable woman in the world!"

And Nora turned upon him a pair of eyes blank with astonishment. It was as though she had been asleep and he had rudely awakened her. His infatuation blinded him to the truth; he saw in the look a feminine desire to throw the others off the track as to the sentiment expressed in his whispered words.

The hour passed tolerably well. Herr Rosen then observed the time, rose and excused himself. He took the steps leading abruptly down the terrace to the carriage road. He had come by the other way, the rambling stone stairs which began at the porter's lodge, back of the villa.

"Padre," whispered Courtlandt, "I am going. Do not follow. I shall explain to you when we meet again."

The padre signified that he understood. Harrigan protested vigorously, but smiling and shaking his head, Courtlandt went away.

Nora ran to the window. She could see Herr Rosen striding along, down the winding road, his head in the air. Presently, from behind a cluster of mulberries, the figure of another man came into view. He was going at a dog-trot, his hat settled at an angle that permitted the rain to beat squarely into his face. The next turn in the road shut them both from sight. But Nora did not stir.

Herr Rosen stopped and turned.

"You called?"

"Yes," Courtlandt had caught up with him just as Herr Rosen was about to open the gates. "Just a moment, Herr Rosen," with a hand upon the bars. "I shall not detain you long."

There was studied insolence in the tones and the gestures which accompanied them.

"Be brief, if you please."

"My name is Edward Courtlandt, as doubtless you have heard."

"In a large room it is difficult to remember all the introductions."

"Precisely. That is why I take the liberty of recalling it to you, so that you will not forget it," urbanely.

A pause. Dark patches of water were spreading across their shoulders. Little rivulets ran down Courtlandt's arm, raised as it was against the bars. "I do not see how it may concern me," replied Herr Rosen finally with an insolence more marked than Courtlandt's.

"In Paris we met one night, at the stage entrance of the Opera. I pushed you aside, not knowing who you were. You had offered your services; the door of Miss Harrigan's limousine."

"It was you?" scowling.

"I apologize for that. Tomorrow morning you will leave Bellagio for Varenna. Somewhere between nine and ten the first train leaves for Milan."

"Varenna! Milan!"

"Exactly. You speak English as naturally and fluently as if you were born to the tongue. Thus, you will leave for Milan. What becomes of you after that is of no consequence to me. Am I making myself clear?"

"Verdamp! Do I believe my ears?" furiously. "Are you telling me to leave Bellagio tomorrow morning?"

"As directly as I can."

Herr Rosen's face became as red as his name. He was a brave young man, but there was danger of an active kind in the blue eyes boring into his own. If it came to a physical contest, he realized that he would get the worst of it. He put his hand to his throat; his very impotence was choking him.

"Your Highness..."

"Highness!" Herr Rosen stepped back.

"Yes. Your Highness will readily see the wisdom of my concern for your hasty departure when I add that I know all about the little house in Varenna, that my knowledge is shared by the chief of the Parisian police and the minister of war. If you annoy Miss Harrigan with your equivocal attentions..."

"Gott! This is too much!"

"Wait! I am stronger than you are. Do not make me force you to hear me to the end. You have gone about this intrigue like a blackguard, and that I know Your Highness not to be. The matter is, you are young, you have always had your way, you have not learnt restraint. Your presence here is an insult to Miss Harrigan, and if she was pleasant to you this afternoon it was for my benefit. If you do not go, I shall expose you."

Courtlandt opened the gate.

"And if I refuse?"

"Why, in that case, being the American that I am, without any particular reverence for royalty or nobility, as it is known, I promise to thrash you soundly tomorrow morning at ten o'clock, in the dining room, in the bureau, the drawing room, wherever I may happen to find you."

Courtlandt turned on his heel and hurried back to the villa. He did not look over his shoulder. If he had, he might have felt pity for the young man who leaned heavily against the gate, his burning face pressed upon his rain-soaked sleeve.

When Courtlandt knocked at the door and was admitted, he apologized. "I came back for my umbrella."

"Umbrella!" exclaimed the padre. "Why, we had no umbrellas. We came up in a carriage which is probably waiting for us this very minute by the porter's lodge."

"Well, I am certainly absent-minded!"

"Absent-minded!" scoffed Abbott. "You never forget anything in all your life, unless it was to go to bed. You wanted an excuse to come back."

"Any excuse would be a good one in that case. I think we'd better be going, Padre. And by the way, Herr Rosen begged me to present his regrets. He is leaving Bellagio in the morning."

Nora turned her face once more to the window.

Nation's Wiser Part.

Since the foolish part of mankind will make wars from time to time with each other, not having sense enough otherwise to settle their differences, it certainly becomes the wiser part, who cannot prevent those wars, to alleviate as much as possible the calamities attending them.—Benjamin Franklin.

Philadelphia, Oct. 10.—The Boston Braves, champions of the National league, knocked Chief Bender out of the box in the sixth inning of the opening game of the world's series at Shibe Park, while little Dick Rudolph, pitching for Stallings' men, held the hard-hitting Mackmen down to five hits, widely scattered over the nine innings.

Final score—Boston, 7; Athletics, 1. Chief Bender decided almost one of his off days, and wobbled almost from the very start. His removal from the mound upsets the long record of Athletic's pitchers, for it was the first time that Connie Mack was ever obliged to bench a twirler in a world's series because of inefficiency. Combs was taken out in 1911, but that was necessary because of an injury.

Rudolph, serving his first year in the big leagues, was the hero of the game, and his masterful work served to justify the estimate of Hans Lobert, Miller Huggins and other National leaguers that he is the brainiest pitcher in their circuit. The little bald-headed twirler was cool in the pinches, grinning and confident at all times.

Rudolph had a great assortment of curves, spitballs and fast ones, and he mixed 'em and served 'em up with the dexterity of a busy bartender on a Saturday night. Only five hits were obtained from his delivery, and no two of them came in one inning. Hard hit ters like Oldring, Collins and Barry failed to solve Rudolph's pitching.

Barry and Oldring each were charged with two strike-outs at the hands of Rudolph. The young moundman fanned eight Mackmen, and his slow curves were particularly bewildering, breaking over the plate time and again with deadly effect.

Next to Rudolph, the most conspicuous performer for the Braves was Hank Gowdy, his battery mate. The lanky catcher, whose batting ability had never been rated as extraordinary, had a single, a double, a triple and a base on balls in his four trips to the plate.

Rabbit Maranville, who batted after him, contributed two timely singles.

Deal, playing third base for Boston in place of J. Carlisle Smith, whose ankle was broken in a game with the Brooklyn on Tuesday, really proved to be an ally of the Mackmen, for three times he came to bat with men on bases and hit into double plays. The score:

SCHWAB LOST WAR ORDERS, IS RUMOR

Salesmen Notified Motor Contract Award is Postponed.

South Bethlehem, Pa., Oct. 10.—Scores of salesmen who have been here bidding for contracts to furnish the French government material of various kinds for the army were surprised when an official of the purchasing department of the Bethlehem Steel company notified them that the awarding of the contracts had been indefinitely postponed.

It was freely rumored among the salesmen that a big portion of the contract had been spirited away from Mr. Schwab.

In this connection the firm name of Charles R. Flint & Co., of New York, was mentioned. Flint, it is rumored, got the contract to purchase 1600 motor trucks and that he had already awarded to the Pierce Arrow people the contract for 300 motor trucks and to the White people a contract for 600 trucks.

It was Flint who is alleged to have furnished arms for General Carranza in the Mexican revolution. It is rumored that Flint offered to furnish the French government with the war material at a less per cent than Schwab did. Several salesmen ventured the statement that the amount of business taken away from Bethlehem will amount to $2,000,000.

Among the contracts alleged to have been given out by the New York firm is one for 800 sets of automobile tires at $250 a set.

Another rumor, which could not be confirmed, is that the great amount of coast defense guns being built by the Bethlehem concern for Chile, said to amount to more than $1,000,000, has been sold by Chile to France. As fast as this material is manufactured it is to be delivered to some South American country and from there will be shipped to Europe. It is also rumored that France has given the steel company a large order for guns to be delivered by November.

TOO STINGY FOR ANYTHING.

Anyhow He Ought to Have Known
They Were Willing to Pay.

"New Yorkers ain't what you would call neighborly," Mrs. Bates summed up to her friend, Mary Abby Thomas, at the end of a dramatic account of her ten days' sojourn in Manhattan. "No, nor even humanly accommodating as one man to another," she added firmly; "they're plain stuck up."

"How so?" inquired Mary Abby with eager interest. "In more ways than one, but one'll do," Mrs. Bates answered with dignity, her long, thin cheeks flushing as with some poignant recollection. "The last morning but one before we left as Hiram and I were starting out for the day he noticed a spot on the front of my gray skirt. You know how particular he is and I expected he'd send me back to the hotel. But he didn't. He seemed to have a quick idea near's I could make out from his face, and before I could ask what he was doing he stepped up to a public chauffeur pulled up at the sidewalk in a big automobile. We'd seen him lots of times and noticed that he favored our Alice's Frank considerably, and there was no reason why he shouldn't have recognized us. Besides, he'd ought to have known we wa'n't the borrowing kind of folks, but meant to pay."

"Young man," Hiram says to him, 'can you spare us a little mite of your gasoline? My wife's got a grease spot on her dress.' "What's s's he. But it wasn't a question; he understood what Hiram said well enough, for he began to snicker, and before I could pull H along that boy was laughing fit to split."

"I call him stingy," said Mary Abby with an air of furnishing a fresh interpretation of character. "It wouldn't have taken more than a drop or two of his old gasoline."

Wasted Effort.

Representative Bell of Georgia once spent about two weeks carrying a law case through the courts to obtain a writ of habeas corpus to free a man from jail in his county. When he finally got the writ, after much difficulty, and handed it to the sheriff, the latter took one look and then remarked disgustedly: "Huh! That fellow broke out o' here a month ago and I ain't seen him since."—New York Sun.

A New Kind of Flower.

Demetra Yaka in her book, "A Child of the Orient," tells an amusing story of her first dinner in the new world. "A tall glass vase stood in the middle of the table filled with such strange flowers as we had never seen before.

"WHAT IS THE MATTER WITH IT?" They were pale greenish white, with streaks of yellow. We thought it very kind of the proprietor to furnish them for us and each of us took one and fastened it on our dresses.

"The waiters glanced at us in surprise, but it was nothing to the sensation we created when we rose to go out of the dining room. People nudged each other and stared at us. Of the French maid who came to unfasten my dress I asked: 'Do we seem very foreign?'

"No, indeed," she replied; 'I should have taken mademoiselle for a French girl except that she wears her hair loose on her back.' "Then why did the people in the dining room stare at us so?" "She suppressed a giggle. 'Yes, I know, mademoiselle, I have heard about it. It is the flower mademoiselle is wearing.'

"What is the matter with it?" "Nothing, except that it is not a flower; it is a vegetable, called celery."
